Encourage women to smell their poop to be more inclusive to Trans women

Some women have a hole where their penis used to be, and that hole often shares microbiome with the colon—creating a distinct transitioning odor.

Created by Jamey Braunstein

In solidarity with Trans women, this month you can make a difference by putting your olfactory system to use – while going number #2!

Yes! It's not a joke. We are sincerely asking all women to please spend more time smelling their poo during bathroom breaks, and to critically examine what many of our gender have to endure as part of the cost of bottom surgery. It is time for us all to do the work to truly empathize with the sights, sounds, and smells endured by every member of our large and beautiful gender community – including those with distinct transitioning odors:

Based on Gram stain the majority of smears revealed a mixed microflora that had some similarity with bacterial vaginosis (BV) microflora and that contained various amounts of cocci, polymorphous Gram-negative and Gram-positive rods, often with fusiform and comma-shaped rods, and sometimes even with spirochetes.

The social taboo around frank discussion of smells is already quite strong, but doubly so when it comes to the ones that can come from MtF neovaginas. If you are a regular on advice and trans subreddits, you know you usually don't have to wander too far down the feeds before coming across anonymous posts carefully prodding for advice on neovaginal smells, like this one:

[...] One night I was going to go down on her, so she washed her bits before she came in the bedroom and she laid on my bed. I was about a few inches from her face when I noticed a foul smell that I can best describe as stale urine, cheesy, and a bit like feces.

I've heard of post op mtf smells, but I've read most people saying that they go away quickly after transition. Anyway, I backed away because I was so put off by that smell. She kept asking what's wrong and I finally broke down and told her what's wrong.

She was confused and kept smelling herself saying she didn't smell anything. She said she just washed it too. It's been a fight between me and her and she's self conscious about it. I asked if it could be an infection or her hygiene habits, lifestyle, or diet because I know those things can affect the smell of the vagina.

She told me that's just the way her vagina and all vaginas smell. She told me it didn't smell like what I described it as and it just smelled like vagina. I tried asking my mother about what it could be and she couldn't give me any answers because she's not informed on this topic. I tried asking my gay cousin but she didn't have any answers either.

I was wondering if anyone in here could give me some advice on this? Do transgender women just have a different smell down there than cis women? Is that just her natural smell? If so, what can I do to get used to the smell? [...]

But before we get to the cultural impact and science of unique genital scents, read on to learn about the sad story that sparked a poovolution in a Canadian public school.

"As I was transitioning, I found it triggering that my cisgender female friends didn't smell like poo," the top of the fateful note read. It had arrived by way of the Trans Express.

That's what they called it there. The relatively small but respected Canadian school had just set up an anonymous tip box for LGBTQ folks to alert the faculty to issues faced by their community. It was a lavender wooden box, decorated with cheery handwriting, plastic flowers, and other colorful accoutrements, discretely placed by the janitor's closet near the main bathrooms.

Three times a week the woman describing herself as the school's "trans mama bear" ceremoniously poured its heartrending contents out onto a table in the faculty lounge....

It seems many folks are misinterpreting this piece, which is about cis women setting aside a little bit of time each day to fully engage their senses and reflect on other, less privileged, experiences.

It's never not right to inject a little bit more thoughtfulness and empathy into our daily lives.

Stay sunny

I thought this was satire at first, before i looked at the rest of the site.

So lemme ask a question: why are you just asking women to smell shit? Why don't men need to "get used to transvaginal odors"? Why is it only women that need to suppress their gag reflex and force themselves to lick a festering wound? Don't some transwomen date men?

Lol, just kidding—we know why. Go fuck yourselves.

I could only afford half the surgery so I have one giant boob in the middle of my chest and a dong that goes inside my vag. When people tell me to f*** myself, little so they know I'm already doing it! 😊

"what many of our gender have to endure as part of the cost of bottom surgery"
nobody MADE you do that, sis. insane that men put absolutely zero money or time into researching women's reproductive health (endometriosis, vaginismus, PCOS, bc side effects) yet somehow still believed they could recreate a woman's reproductive system. and now actual women are supposed to sniff shit to make men feel better?
no way in seven hells.

These comments are extremely transphobic. Some women have a front-hole connected to their colons. It's not a big deal.

REPLYAnonymous

No, no women have a "front hole" connected to their colon. That's the exclusive property of mentally diseased men who butcher themselves for sick sexual gratification.

Btw, being disgusted by you filthy freaks isn't a "phobia." It's called "natural and healthy."

My boyfriend saw me smelling my own poop and left me. But my hubby doesn't know but worried he will also leave? How can I get him to understand it's transphobic not to??? I can't let him leave I financially depend on him 😞

REPLYA woman

Nah you can fuck right off with this one, it's their fault to use their colon to get a vagina and then feel triggered because women don't smell like poo? You used your colon, what did you expect? Wild country rose?

You'll never be a woman so get a grip.

Ewwww so basically in the name of inclusion we are supposed to get comfortable with poopwounds and leaving ourselves susceptible to getting pink eye and hepatitis 🤢🤮🤮. An inside out penis attached to a colon is not a vagina and never will be! Vaginas don't smell like poop. Vaginas clean themselves die male about it 😊

Transgender people are mentally ill and that fecal smell you're noting is your mutilated genitals necrotizing from exposure to your own waste.

REPLY

Doctor Dong

The operation types differ, but some of them cut out part of their colon and operate into their new vagina, that way they don't use skin inside there with hair and dead skin cells collecting up there for decaying smell. There's also always the risk of leaving too little meat inside the wound so the walls to the colon is exposed and damaged, so literal shit escapes trough their neo vagina.

This reminded me of the /r/NeovaginaDisasters/ subreddit where trans people talk about their neovaginas gone wrong (eg. <https://archive.ph/EnaW4>), but I see now it's banned because reddit wants to promote more transitioning. By hiding this they are directly and knowingly responsible for some portion of the butchery going forward. Gave me chills knowing they can be so calculatingly evil. A freaking internet app.

REPLYAnonymous

In the future we'll look back on this butchery for a fantasy cult with horror. At least shit like human sacrifice used to make a little bit of sense, like sending someone to the rain god pleases it and therefore it follows that the drought might end.

I had bottom surgery yesterday. Everything went great and now I'm finally done with the whole transitioning phase of being trans. Even bought myself a support shark to help me recover. (i.redd.it) Hello

The doctor was very very very clear that this would not be like a cis vagina. And I knew that before I met him. They did mention it could smell a little. But that it would literally fill a room with the smell of poop. And the smell is caused by bacteria and will be there for as long as I live.

[-] stupidstories [S] 1 point 14 minutes ago

The thing is the odor is just getting worse and worse. It smells so strongly of feces. When it was healing it had those "normal" wound healing smells. But wounds are not supposed to smell like feces.

[-] stupidstories [S] 9 points an hour ago

But it smells REALLY bad. Its so disgusting and unbearable. Thats the absolute worst part about this, it smells literally like actual poop.

And that gaping blackhole down there is the "canal". Its always open like that and the pink part with a wound in the middle is like a cavity in real life. Its hard to see on the picture but you could fit a finger in that cavity. From the side you can see that half of the outer left (on pic) "labia" is gone. that pink part of it is a cavity.

[-] stupidstories 2 points an hour ago

They don't want to help me and just tell me everything is normal.

I feel so betrayed and like an idiot for falling for this shit. The entire surgery is just a joke. How can they do this to people?

[-] stupidstories [S] 11 points an hour ago

Yes, I had 3 consultations before the surgery and they showed me 3 pics. One of the pictures looked sorta like mine with a huge gaping hole at the bottom and I told him that doesn't look human. And asked him if mine would look like that, he told me I would not. And now I look liked that.

Also the ax wound that is left after the penis and testicles are carved out will produce a smell called malodor. Its specific to open wounds that have a decay or shit like smell and in the case of male to female transitions is permanent due to the fake vaginal cavity being an optimal biome for the bacteria responsible.

Damn you for sending me down this rabbit hole!

<https://magazine.nursing.jhu.edu/2019/05/wound-care-transgender-women-vaginoplasty/>

"Up to 30 percent of transgender women who have undergone a vaginoplasty suffered from some form of infection related to the procedure"

"After a vaginoplasty, a patient's wound dressing must be kept in place for no less than five days and cannot be removed or replaced for that entire time. The wound dressing is a latex condom filled with gauze and a tightly wrapped gauze "brief"—think of it as a very tight homemade diaper wrapped around the abdomen, buttocks, and vagina. When patients have a bowel movement, nurses remove the stool and clean it as best they can."

"A transgender woman with an acute vaginal infection after her second vaginoplasty (her first failed due to infection, among other factors) presented to the emergency department I worked at as a nurse student extern. Over the course of her assessment, she told me how, in her postoperative state, she independently restricted her intake to prevent bowel movements. She did not want to soil her dressing, as was the case during her first vaginoplasty. Listening to her experiences, I was completely in awe of her strength, persistence, and ingenuity"
