

White House says it is Pentagon's 'sacred obligation' to help troops get abortions: Tears into Republicans and says U.S. military will 'lose talent' if access to the procedure is limited

- The policy is under fire from Sen. Tuberville who is blocking appointments
- But Kirby said it was essential to recruiting the best personnel

Hardline abortion restrictions in states such as Alabama are having an impact on morale in the U.S. military, White House National Security Council spokesman John Kirby said on Monday, as he delivered an impassioned defense of Pentagon policies.

It comes as Sen. Tommy Tuberville, a Republican from Alabama, blocks hundred of senior military appointments in protest.

He says he will not back down unless the Defense Department scraps its policy offering support to service members who need to travel out of state for terminations after the Supreme Court scrapped abortion protections last year.

'I'm really glad you asked that question,' said Kirby, who is an admiral in the Navy in response to a query about whether the policy was necessary for military readiness.

He said for an all-volunteer service, it was part of the contract between military leaders and the men and women who signed up to serve.

Kirby: abortion services in military is 'the right darn thing to do'

Whether it's about female service members, one in five, or female family members being able to count on the kinds of health care and reproductive care specifically that they need to serve,' he said during the White House briefing, 'that is a foundational sacred obligation of military leaders across the river.'

The Pentagon, across the Potomac in Virginia, has frequently been the target of conservatives as it builds the sort of diverse fighting force that reflects the nation.

Republicans have accused it of being more interested in being 'woke' than warfighting.

The Department of Defense says Tuberville's stance has already stalled more than 260 nominations of senior officers. That figure could reach 650 by the end of the year.

He is refusing to lift his blockade until their is a vote on the Pentagon's policy of offering paid leave and expenses for service members who have to travel to get an abortion.

'I don't know whether it would pass,' he said last week. 'It may. I don't care.'

'I just want the American people to have a say-so in this, not the Pentagon.'

At the same time, House Republicans signaled that no area of policy is safe from their culture war attacks.

Kirby pointed out that one in five military personnel were now female

Last week they passed an annual defense authorization bill that included limits on abortion, transgender transition treatment, and diversity training. In so doing they ended a long standing practice of passing such bills with bipartisan support, and ensured it will be rejected by the Senate.

Against that backdrop, Kirby said active duty personnel and spouses recently told him that abortion restrictions were having an impact on their willingness to serve.

'So if you don't think there's going to be a retention and morale issue, think again because it's already having that effect,' he said.

Service members do not get to pick and choose where they are based, he continued, citing the example of his son and his son-in-law who are both in the Navy.

'And so what happens if you get assigned to a state like Alabama, which has a pretty restrictive abortion law in place, and you're concerned about your reproductive care?' he asked.

'What do you do? Do you say no and get out?'

'Well, some people may decide to do that. And what does that mean?'

'That means we lose talent, important talent.'

'And we're an all-volunteer force. Recruiting is tough enough as it is with a very strong economy out there.'

'We want to keep the people that we get and we want to we want to make sure that they can continue to serve.'

The Federal Government, which includes the Military, is expressly forbidden from spending taxpayer money on abortions with only a few specific exceptions. It's called the Hyde Amend and is the current law governing federal taxpayer funding of abortions.

Sacred obligation? To get abortions? How many servicemen impregnated servicewomen, so they can get a sacred abortion...I would think we have higher bars for our service men and women.
